I am currently a postdoctoral fellow at Carleton University's Institute of Political Economy, my current research project investigates the interrelationships between Indigenous land defenders and organized labour in what's presently known as Canada. In my academic work I carry active affiliations with the Canadian Association of Political Science, the Canadian Association of Work and Labour Studies, and the Global Labour Research Centre at York University. Since 2022, I have also been a member of the Board of Directors for Peace Brigades International—Canada.

Primarily, I am interested in scholarship and political work that emerges from and advances broadly liberatory politics. In particular, I root myself in anti-colonial and anti-imperialist tendencies within the Marxist tradition. Serving on the executive of Socialist Studies would be an opportunity to bring this Third and Fourth World traditions more firmly into the centre of socialist and communist thought in Canada.
